

Ready to treat your home for radioactive radon gas? Use a professional.

Would you use your dentist to perform your heart surgery? No!

A specialised professional is always the safest, most qualified choice for a specialised job. Radon is a radioactive carcinogen that kills over 1,000 people from lung cancer in the UK every year—it deserves serious attention.

A trained, experienced radon professional brings you peace of mind. You can rest easy knowing that your mitigator is following industry standards. You also know they are installing a high-quality fan designed specifically for radon reduction, resulting in a safer home for you and your family.

A professional radon mitigator is up to date on the latest educational information. When a mitigator is trained and a member of a professional organisation like the UK Radon Association, you know you are getting someone with a strong sense of professionalism, who has dedicated time and energy to providing you with the highest level of service.

No man is an island, and the radon remediation community is no different. A specialist radon mitigator is part of an international network of radon professionals and has access to new training and equipment to better protect your home as it immediately becomes available.

Breathe easy. Choose a professional to treat your home for radon.
